.3 MB A: apt itself has --no-properties option. This is not documented. Adding --no-properties to apt may make the problem go away. The --no-properties option is documented in README.google. The overall objective of the development of a gene therapy product for therapy of genetic disorders with retroviral vectors is to produce a safe and effective product which will be used for treatment of patients with inherited diseases. The development of a safe and effective gene therapy product for use in treating a genetic disease will require that the basic science of gene therapy progress to its practical phase. The specificity and feasibility of a specific approach to the problem of gene therapy with retroviral vectors must be determined. Since the development of the clinical approach to gene therapy with retroviral vectors will be a long and difficult process, the development of the basic science will be a much shorter process. The long term objective of this project is to determine the feasibility of using retroviral vectors for treatment of genetic diseases. The specific objective of this project is to determine the specificity of a retroviral gene therapy product for the first disease which can be corrected by the gene therapy approach. The Huskies were led by senior Blake DeWitt (Belmont) who shot 5-8 from 3-point range while putting up 17 points. Senior Kyle Petersen (Hanover) had 14 points while playing solid defense. Freshman Jordan Reed (St. John's) added 10 points while playing great defense as well. Sophomore Kasilas Yarbrough (South Eugene) had 12 points and two blocks. Freshman John Lloyd (Parker) was 6-7 from the field. The Huskies shot 20-36 from the floor and were outrebounded 20-35. Hanover was able to take the lead with a basket by Petersen but the Huskies tied the game up with back-to-back baskets by DeWitt and Reed to take the lead for good. UW-O lost the lead with a basket by Yarbrough and a free throw by DeWitt, but the Husky defense held the Tigers to only one basket the rest of the game. DeWitt added a free throw with 4.8 seconds left in the game to seal the deal. The Huskies used a 36-20 rebounding advantage to win the game. UW-O had a 24- 82157476af
